THE ANTIQUITY OF ALMANACS.—The almanacs of the Middle Ages were consecrated almost entirely to astrology and alchemy. The oldest printed almanac of which we have any knowledge appeared at Vienna in 1460. Fourteen years later Regimontanus, a German mathematician living in Hungary, published a series of almanacs from 1475 to 1506. They contained only the prediction of eclipses and the movements of the planets. In 1579 Henry III., King of France, forbade the almanacs to make predictions concerning political affairs and England then had the monopoly of almanacs, but toward 1775, astrology fell beneath the attacks of satirical writers, and by degrees the almanacs took their present form.

special attention to their Mourning Department.
