

DALHOUSIE REVIEW

CONTRIBUTORS

Douglas Barbour, poet and critic, teaches English at the University of Alberta.

P.S. Barry, who teaches at the University of Alberta, has written several articles on the Prolific Pipeline theme.

Ann Boutelle, who teaches English at Suffolk University, Boston, looks at Canadian Literature from another country.

Nancy Fraser, a recent Dalhousie M.A., wrote her thesis on Nineteenth-Century Canadian Literature.

Arthur R.M. Lower, eminent Canadian historian, has contributed many essays to The Dalhousie Review over the years.

John Lye is with the Department of English, Brock University.

Kenneth Radu teaches at John Abbott College, Ste. Anne de Bellevue, Quebec.

R.A. Shields teaches history at the University of Calgary.

Allen P. Stouffer is the Chairman of the Department of History, St. Francis Xavier University.

Maurice Yacowar, who teaches in the Department of Drama, Brock University, has three books on films coming out this fall.

J.M. Zezulka teaches English at the University of Western Ontario.

Verse from:

Frederick Zydek, Omaha, Nebraska; Allan Brown, Kingston, Ontario; Sparkling Mills, Herring Cove, Nova Scotia; Ian MacLennan, Halifax, Nova Scotia; Hank Johnsen, Vancouver, British Columbia; Theresa Moritz, Toronto; Maria Jacobs, Willowdale, Ontario.