

Janet Ajzenstat, whose first degree was in Art and Archaeology, has a Ph.D. in Political Economy from the University of Toronto. She has held a series of teaching appointments at McMaster University, and in 1985 was awarded the Jules and Gabrielle Léger Fellowship by the S.S.H.R.C.

David Bevan is Professor of French at Acadia University. His book on Michel Tournier is in the press.

Jennifer Brady, an Assistant Professor of English at Rhodes College in Memphis, has published essays on Jonson's poetry in SEL and Studies in Philology.

Anne Compton is an Islander currently living in New Brunswick and writing a Ph.D. thesis on "The Poetry of A.J.M. Smith".

Len Findlay is Professor of English at the University of Saskatchewan. He is currently editing a volume of essays on literary theory and completing a series of his own essays in theoretical questions.

James Gray is Professor of English at Dalhousie University and one of the editors of the Yale Edition of Samuel Johnson's works.

Lauriat Lane, Jr., has published essays and reviews on literary theory, on Dickens, and on Thoreau and other American writers. He is working on a study of the longer poems of Archibald MacLeish.

Christopher Levenson lives in Ottawa.

David Lucking, who grew up in Montreal and Toronto, lives in Italy, where he teaches at the University of Lecce.

Gerald Lynch, the author of numerous stories and essays in literary periodicals, won first prize for fiction in the National Magazine Awards in 1982. He is presently an Assistant Professor of English at the University of Ottawa.

Jay Newman is Professor of Philosophy at the University of Guelph and author of Foundations of Religious Tolerance (1982) and the forthcoming The Mental History of John Henry Newman, as well as papers on W.S. Gilbert in The Savoyard and The Gilbert and Sullivan Journal.

Peter Schwenger is Professor of English at Mount Saint Vincent University.

Donald Wiebe, Associate Professor in the Toronto School of Theology (Trinity College), and in the Graduate Centre for the Study of Religion at the University of Toronto, is the author of Religion and Truth (1981) and several articles on theology and philosophy, and is also general editor of the series, Toronto Studies in Religion.