

DEATH AND LIFE

F. J. RASHLEIGH

Each in his lowly lodging lying,
I heard the dead, with bitter cries,
Rebelligiously and long denying
The many mansions of the skies.

And, to that earthy speech replying,
Rose up the words of men who pray,
With penitential anguish buying
The dreams the dead have cast away.