

Teen Choice (Book) Awards: The Red Maple and White Pine Program of the OLA

By Melanie Grant

Ontario Library Association executive members attended the Texas Library Association's convention in 1993 to learn how they managed to stay engaged and relevant with young people in a large area, very similar geographically and demographically to Ontario, and were inspired by the Texas Bluebonnet Award, a children's choice book award selected by kids in grades 3-6. Upon return to Ontario, after some study, the Silver Birch Award was founded in 1994. In 1998, the Forest of Reading program expanded to include the Red Maple award for young people in grades 7-8, and in 2002, the White Pine award for grades 9-12 (OLA, 2013).

Each year, book titles are put forward by authors and publishers. The goals of the Forest of Reading program, in addition to encouraging literacy, include promoting Canadian authors, so the nominated books must be written by a Canadian citizen or resident, and published within two years preceding the nomination deadline. Ten fiction books in the Red Maple and White Pine categories are selected for nomination by a committee of the OLA, and in alternating years, nonfiction books are included in those categories as well. Participating students must read at least five nominated books to be eligible to vote.

The Forest of Reading program has categories encompassing all age groups, levels of reading, and French and English-language books, and all awards are selected by the readers of the books. Although there are "trees" for adult readers, the focus is primarily on fostering reading among children and youth.

This is a selection of other teen choice book awards across Canada:

The winners of the children's and youth Forest of Reading categories are announced at the largest of the Festival of Trees celebrations, which occurs in Toronto in May. The Festival of Trees is the largest children's and young adults' literary festival in Canada, and it is focused on young people as attendees, with its events geared to the more than 8000 young people expected to attend; activities scheduled include workshops with nominated authors, a "tattoo tent" and a book trading tent. Other Ontario cities are invited to hold their own Festival of Trees, and in 2013, Parry Sound, Thunder Bay, and North Bay will be participating in the lead-up to the Toronto festival with their own literary events.

At the time of publication, the 2013 Red Maple and White Pine winners will have been announced, but discussing the merits of the winning selections would be a good topic of debate in a library youth group or book club. Here are the nominees for 2013:

Past winners of the Red Maple and White Pine awards make for great additions to booklists, but have not been without controversy: in 2009, Red Maple-nominated Book Nerd by Susin Nielsen was challenged in Hamilton, Ontario, for its inclusion of foul language. The OLA stood behind Nielsen, and Book Nerd went on to win the 2010 Red Maple Award. To build a youth-approved booklist of excellent Canadian young adult literature, try these titles, the winners from the past five years of the Red Maple and White Pine awards:

Red Maple Fiction:

2012 Half Brother by Kenneth Opper
 2011 Not Suitable for Family Viewing by Vicki Grant
 2010 Word Nerd by Susin Nielsen
 2009 Out of the Cold by Norah McClintock
 2008 Safe as Houses by Eric Walters

Red Maple Nonfiction:

2011 Bite of the Mango by Mariatu Kamara
 2009 Royal Murder by Elizabeth MacLeod

White Pine Fiction:

2012 The Gathering by Kelley Armstrong
2011 The Monkeyface Chronicles by Richard Scarsbook
2010 Mostly Happy by Pam Bustin
2009 Little Brother by Corey Doctorow
2008 Keturah and Lord Death by Martine Leavitt

White Pine Nonfiction:

2012 The Book of Awesome by Neil Pasricha
