

THE DALHOUSIE REVIEW

Contributors

Douglas Barbour is a poet and critic who teaches English at the University of Alberta.

Paul E. Corcoran is a lecturer in Political Philosophy at the University of Adelaide.

Carole Gerson is a Canada Council Doctoral Fellow working on a dissertation on nineteenth-century Canadian literature.

Leona Gom is a poet and critic who lives in Vancouver.

H. Pearson Gundy, who now lives in Toronto, has had a long association with Queen's University and has written a history of Queen's.

Frederick Jones is Lecturer in History at Bournemouth College of Technology, Bournemouth, England.

Wayne R. Kime, who teaches English at New College, University of Toronto, has published many articles and has completed a book on Washington Irving.

Neil MacKinnon, who teaches History at St. Francis Xavier University, is a graduate of Dalhousie and Queen's now working on a book on the Loyalists of Nova Scotia.

Bruce Rickard is at the University of Maine's Canadian-American Center, specializing in Canadian history.

David Savage teaches Canadian Literature at Simon Fraser University.

Verse from Theodore Colson, Fredericton, New Brunswick; John V. Hicks, Prince Albert, Saskatchewan; Stephen Shu-Ning Liu, Las Vegas, Nevada; Alastair Macdonald, St. John's, Newfoundland; J. McLeod, Omemece, Ontario; Rosalind McPhee, Lions Bay, British Columbia; Michael Brian Oliver, Sherbrooke, Quebec; Robert Reid, Willowdale, Ontario; Linda Svendsen, Coquitlam, British Columbia; Robert L. Tyler, New London, Connecticut; Graeme Wilson, Hong Kong.

You'll
enjoy shopping at

Simpsons